Fees, incentives, and conflicts of interest in relation to financial advice

When you seek financial advice, in addition to considering the fees you pay for the advice and the fees and charges that apply when you act on the advice, you may also want to consider:

- any other payments or other benefits your financial adviser or financial advice provider, or another person connected with them, may receive in connection with giving you advice or you acting on their advice,
- whether any fees, charges, payments or other benefits are likely to materially influence the advice you get, and
- whether your financial adviser or financial advice provider, or another person connected with them, has any other interests likely to materially influence the advice you get.

We charge portfolio fees for some of our investment services and you will usually have to pay fees, expenses, or other amounts in relation to acting on any advice from us (such as brokerage and trade fees, and fund management and other investment management and administration services fees). In addition, in some cases, we receive payments from third parties when you act on advice from us. Generally, the bigger a portfolio or a transaction, and the more transactions done through us and the more services we provide you, the more revenue we receive. Also, many of our Investment Advisers receive remuneration from Forsyth Barr based in part on the portfolio fees, brokerage and other revenues we receive on the accounts they manage.

These various payments create potential conflicts of interest and, as such, have the potential to influence advice provided if advice processes are not properly managed. Forsyth Barr and our Investment Advisers follow processes, and we have oversight and controls, designed to ensure that the financial advice you receive from us is not influenced by fees, charges, payments, other benefits or other interests (see “Steps taken to manage conflicts of interest” below for more detail).

Steps taken to manage conflicts of interest

Forsyth Barr has a number of policies and procedures in place to ensure that any conflicts of interest are identified and managed and that our investors' interests are always put first. These are:

- disclosing the existence of conflicts of interest to investors, including in the disclosure above,
- the Forsyth Barr Code of Conduct, which applies to all Forsyth Barr employees. The Code provides that employees must never permit their personal interests to conflict with or to appear to conflict with, the interests of investors or Forsyth Barr. All employees must make all reasonable efforts to avoid conflicts of interest and ensure that clients are fairly treated,
- compliance by our Investment Advisers with the Code of Professional Conduct for Financial Advice Services and NZX Participant Rules,
- internal monitoring by our Compliance team to ensure that our directors and employees comply with our duties to clients and all other relevant laws and rules, and
- regular reporting on compliance-related issues to our board.
