There is much to be discussed when Synlait Milk (SML) reports its FY20 result on Monday 28 September. SML's longstanding guidance range is wide, which, coupled with low visibility on key drivers, leaves room for differences to market expectations. A lot has changed over the past 12 months including (1) material capital investment for the next phase of growth, (2) a surprise profit warning from SML in February 2020, (3) move into NZ processing from its key customer, The a2 Milk Company, (4) Pokeno Supreme Court hearing, (5) larger move into Everyday Dairy, with the acquisition of Dairyworks and (6) COVID-19. We are interested in an update on all these areas, as well as any progress with new customers and first-time FY21 outlook.

Key points of interest

- FY20 result itself: Longstanding guidance (first provided in February 2020) is wide, for NPAT of NZ$70-85m (-15% to +3% versus FY19). Our forecast is NZ$80m, slightly below the prior year (-3%).
- FY21 outlook: Growth will be underpinned by the recent Dairyworks acquisition. We look for an update on: Everyday Dairy strategy, plans for capacity utilisation across the group, cost & capex outlook and any insights on its key finished infant formula category (volumes and margins).
- Balance sheet: Is FY20 the gearing peak? This is our view, which we look to test at the result.
- Capacity, costs and customers: Recent expansionary capex is weighing on near-term returns, with cost investment a drag in the early stages until utilisation ramps up. SML has material capacity to fill. We want to see progress with new customers to de-risk recent capital investment, narrow the potential earnings outcomes and show SML can replicate success on its larger asset base.
- An update on Pokeno: How SML utilises capacity can dictate the feasible returns profile. We look for updated insight on how to think about product mix for the site in both the short and longer-term, particularly given recent pressures in infant base powder. SML's legal issues at Pokeno also need resolution, however, that is waiting a Supreme Court decision (hearing was 3/4 June).
